The Cyclades are a very popular destination for summer vacation, especially Mykonos. But what people don't know, is that the islands are even more beautiful during Easter vacation, because of the local traditions and the ambiance. In 2008, my family and I went on a cruise, on the Cyclades. On Great Thursday we slept on the fairy in Paros and we woke up in Mykonos. As soon as I opened my eyes I was amazed as always with the blue and white buildings and the amphitheatric density of the Aegean. When I stepped on the deck, I understood why it's called the Island of Winds. But thankfully while walking on the "chora" (the center of the island) it was much better, and I could smell the freshly made traditional pastries. After some breakfast the walk continued both near the sea and higher to enjoy the view. The churches were preparing for the pomp of the epitaphs so there were people going to and returning from the churches. The doors were wide open and one could see the children crossing under the heavily decorated epitaphs. At the time of sunset people were posed together on the mantels to watch it. After sunset it was the time for the pomp. The epitaphs lead the crowd, the band was following, people were singing and caring their candles. Sometimes we needed to wait for others epitaphs to cross and compering them to the one we were following. When we finally would arrive back to the church everyone would scatter and would go for dinner.
